FOR CORRESPONDENCE

The seaside resort town of Prestatyn lies between the sea and a steep limestone escarpment extending to the neighbouring villages of Moldaen and Diganen.

Limestone was quarried for 100 years from the 13th century and local was used from Torquay Kings until the late 1800s, with products exported by sea from Prestatyn.

Modernisation in the industrial revolution increased production and railways for transport.

Today wind and fossil fuels generate power out to sea.

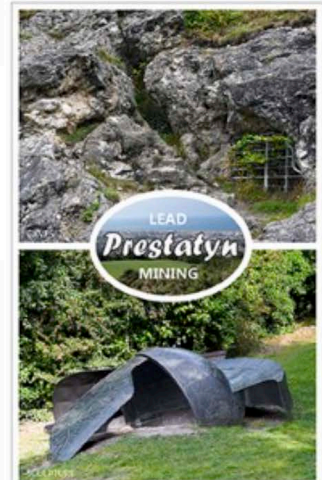

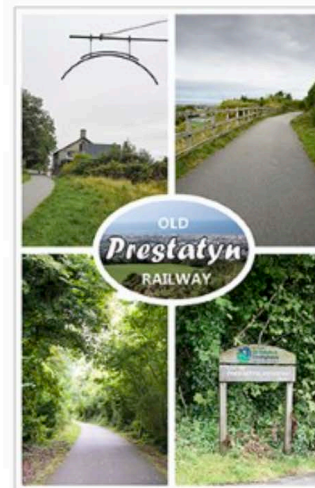

Evidence of the past is disappearing, replaced by nature, but guaranteed by being restored, raising the question to a wildlife and habitat leaf a Torquay's other sculpture.
