

56N 4W, North Lanarkshire by Mark Reeves

This intersection is located in a field that appears primarily to be used for grazing. Indeed, although I didn't notice them on my arrival, by the time I finished my photography there were a number of inquisitive cows heading in my direction.

The primary choice I faced here was to photograph the location itself or the view from the location. Looking south west there were attractive storm clouds and crepuscular rays over Glasgow but the composition wasn't particularly appealing so I opted to photograph the field.

I was determined to stay very close to the actual 56N 4W point and, after some wandering and pondering, was pleased to find that I could create this composition with the intersection in the foreground of my image, barely a couple of metres from my viewpoint.
